The inpatient experience in treating 12 patients with phosgene poisoning, including three with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, was reviewed to determine if phosgene exposure in humans is associated with the development of pneumonitis, pulmonary fibrosis, or both. Thirteen patients with phosgene poisoning who were hospitalized for treatment between 1980 and 1986 were identified from medical records. Eight patients were discharged after a mean stay of 8.4 days. One patient had an adverse outcome: persistent pulmonary dysfunction (SPD), a fibrotic lung disease characterized by interstitial fibrosis. Of the other three patients, 2d92ce491b
